Augusta, Lady Gregory

When Edward succeeded to the throne, he had to defeat a challenge from his cousin, who had a strong claim to the throne as the son of Alfred's elder brother and predecessor. In 912, he marched with his army to Essex, and ordered the building of a fort at and a second fort at Hertford, which protected London from attack and encouraged many English living under Danish rule in Essex to submit to him. They met in 1016, immediately after the failed Jacobite rebellion of 1715, to consider the reform and civilisation of the Highlands, which they sought to achieve by teaching English and the Protestant religion.
