Adalah Legal Center for Arab Minority Rights in Israel v. Minister of Interior

This recommended approach offers a more coherent and unified conception of the relationship between administrative law and the Charter, and better respects the requirements in section 1 of the Charter. In the preceding paragraph I deliberately and not merely conventionally described the latter as a relationship of causal sex. Case law has developed a dual test intended to help identify the character described in the novel: One, the degree of similarity between the literary character and the real character; two, the degree of the violation of privacy.

I do not agree that a court should refrain from examining the lawfulness of the dispensing fee simply because the decision as to what it should be involves economic and political considerations. Another area in which the work, by its nature, raises issues concerning the merger doctrine is that of functional works.
