Pijin classes?

Ditransitive constructions in creole languages Before we show examples with ditransitive constructions, we should mention the fact that in spontaneous texts — and this is not only the case in creoles — one has to look hard to find constructions with two overtly expressed objects. In other words, religion defines the cosmos in such a manner that people know how to respond to it.

What Is the Most Complex Language in the World?

From the Kwaio stand-point, it is usually the adalo himself who prohibits use of his name, and the living who implement this prohibition. This was Henderson Field, THE international airport in the Solomon Islands and a relic of World War II -- Henderson was a large paved field flanked by a ramshackle terminal building and a corrugated tin storage shed.
