From Imitations of Horace

He had endured a humiliating defeat, which scorned to him to indicate the loss of what was his dearest possession, the affection of the American people; he had lost the weight in public affairs which he had built up by thirty years of labor; he saw his property and, as he thought, that of his friends diminished by the attempt to give him a prize which he had in his own estimation fairly earned, and, though last not least, he found his home invaded by death, and one of the strongest of the ties which bind a man to this earth broken. Let bear or elephant be e'er so white, The people, sure, the people are the sight! And I not strip the gilding off a Knave, Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir, or slave? Ben, old and poor, as little seem'd to heed The life to come, in ev'ry poet's creed.

Montagu, Addressed to the Imitator of

But while Horace was genuinely in contact with the court of Augustus, and could celebrate a ruler whose powers included literary appreciation, Pope had no chance at all of addressing George II, who was notoriously dismissive of literary culture. Then cheerful healths your Mistress shall have place And, what's more rare, a Poet shall say Grace.

Imitations of Horace: The First Epistle of the Second Book poem

As the series progresses, moving away from the satires to the epistles, this fixed self becomes increasingly autobiographical.

Imitations of Horace by Alexander Pope

Yes I am proud; I must be proud to see Men not afraid of God, afraid of me: Epil. Pope was a master of the heroic couplet. Now times are chang'd, and one poetic itch Has seiz'd the court and city, poor and rich: Sons, sires, and grandsires, all will wear the bays, Our wives read Milton, and our daughters plays, To theatres, and to rehearsals throng, And all our grace at table is a song.
