A Mediterranean Emporium: The Catalan Kingdom of Majorca by David Abulafia

I am pressing on to read Italy in the Central Middle Ages 1000-1300 next. He does so effectively, depicting a full image of the lands and the rulers involved in its fate. I would recommend this book to anyone seeking to understand a little more of the economics of the Mediterranean in this period as well the history between Spain, France and North Africa.

After the sale of these possessions to the king of France in 1349, James III left for Majorca. Preoccupied with diverse problems within the realm, it was not until 1279 when the Majorcan monarch reconciled to have his states recognized as subordinate to the king of Aragon. In addition, increased taxes to fund the kingdom's economy during its neutrality managed to unsettle the people of the kingdom.

The conquest of Mallorca may have begun as part of a crusader initiative on the part of Catalano-Aragonese king Jaume I, but its political and economic stories quickly came to the fore. To that end, he was forced to participate in the war against 1329-1336 , which resulted in the loss of various economic markets for the kingdom.
