Shelved plan to salute 1996 bomber lays bare Irish fault lines

War and State Terrorism: The United States, Japan, and the Asia-Pacific in the Long Twentieth Century. A special British Joint Intelligence Subcommittee report, German Strategy and Capacity to Resist, prepared for 's eyes only, predicted that Germany might collapse as early as mid-April if the Soviets overran its eastern defences. There were hesitations about breaking agreed and, in effect, legally binding international sanctions against the use of air power to attack civilians.

Striking Oil: The First American Bombing Raid over Europe in World War II

The economic effects of bombing were hugely exaggerated on all sides: German production was dented but not destroyed. Western Allied forces were able to overcome the weakened German Army in early 1945, and soon pushed to the strategic Rhine river along most of the front. This postwar photograph shows the district of being virtually flattened.

Bombing of Dresden in World War II

Before left and after right aerial photographs of the German Luftwaffe. Proponents of this position argue that the devastation from firebombing was greater than anything that could be justified by alone, and this establishes a case. In Asia, the Allies dropped over 18,000 bombs on Thailand, and in August 1942, the United States undertook the first air raids in French Indochina.

1978 Bomber Offensive .... The Devastation of Europe by Noble Frankland

Over 36,000 Allied sailors, airmen, servicemen, and a similar number of merchant seamen, lost their lives.

Originally HALPRO planned to fly from Florida to Brazil and then on to Africa, and by stages to Chekiang, China.

The Allied Rift on Strategic Bombing

The attacks also reduced the available transportation capacity for economic traffic in Germany to the point which could not hope to sustain, over any period of time, a high level of war production. Between February 13 and February 15, American and British bombers destroyed the virtually undefended city of Dresden, Germany, killing more than 25,000 civilians. By the close of 1944 air attacks upon the railroad system had imposed serious delays upon the tactical moves of the Germany Army and often prevented units from reaching their desired destinations.

The War in Europe

Do you know how many people voted for Hitler there in the last free elections? The wording of both the and the Pointblank directive allowed the Commander-in-Chief of RAF Bomber Command sufficient leeway to continue the British campaign of night-time against German industrial cities.
