About

Another unique struggle for some rural departments is that because of the smaller population, the community will know the individual officers personally, know their families and the details of their private lives. The report is available in full below. In addition, rural crime rates, including violent crime, continue to rise even as police staffing levels fall.

Should additional funding become available, this website will be updated and new applications may be accepted. But about half of our law enforcement departments have fewer than 10 officers, according to a 2015 report from the , and approximately 70 percent of them serve communities of fewer than 10,000. The subaward is a federal award provided by a pass-through entity, the Institute for Intergovernmental Research IIR , to a subrecipient, your agency, by which funding is made available through a reimbursement process.

Rural Domestic Preparedness Consortium

The highways and interstates used to channel drugs, weapons and crime to the rest of the US are in large part routed through rural areas. Attorneys have the back of local law enforcement. The BJA and COPS Office have already begun their response to these listening sessions by streamlining and simplifying grant processes and earmarking funds specifically for rural and small agencies.

COPS Office report outlines challenges facing rural police

BJA will send a notification to the applicant agency of its decision to award or not award the funding. Studies show that in urban areas residents are more than three times more likely to believe that police are corrupt or are targeting a specific race.

DOJ Conversation with Alabama Rural Law Enforcement Leaders

Reaves, Local Police Departments, 2013 see note 1 , 3. Much of our work is through innovative law enforcement leadership and is done through the activities and special projects of a number of committees and through active liaison with various levels of government, departmental agencies and other nonprofit associations. The purpose was to hear personally about the challenges rural law enforcement departments face, identify and assess their most pressing needs, and advise them about procedural innovations and promising practices that could work in their communities.
