Chapter One
The coming of the white people: a broken trust

This chapter will examine the history of the past two hundred plus years for indicators from which determinants of the poor health Aboriginal peoples experience today will be summarised. It will take the reader on a journey through time. Although the selection of events is a subjective one, it will allow the reader to consider the nature of the impacts of decisions on Aboriginal peoples.

There are three main items that constitute the common experience of Australia's First Peoples:

- They were invaded.
- They were deprived from their land.
- They were deprived from their culture.

A discussion of these three themes, their impacts in the context of the arrival of the First Fleet in 1788. It must be remembered that the arrival of Europeans resulted in similar consequences throughout the entire country.

In the first place, however, it is important for Settler or Migrant Australians to begin to understand the ongoing relationship between Land and Aboriginal peoples, the interlinkages of the people themselves, and in turn, the importance of these relationships to well-being relationships that will be further discussed later in this work.
