Texas Department of Criminal Justice: An Inventory of Department of Criminal Justice Death Row Historical Files (Execution Files) at the Texas State Archives, 1923

Much of the scourge of lynchings in the Reconstruction South originated in the struggle for legitimate authority between local and federal officials. Prison units were segregated: Black inmates were more likely than their white counterparts to be found in the fields picking cotton. The initiation of centralized state-imposed executions in the United States is generally linked to an 1864 execution in Vermont, but the momentum for removing these events from the emotional fever of local communities began to build during the height of lynchings in the 1890s.
