They could easily have presented a separate Bill. Economic stability was coming under renewed focus as central bankers warned this weekend that highly leveraged hedge funds were creating a risk to the global financial system.

Pension rights after a TUPE transfer

It never struck me that widows were guilty of something for nothing—yet the Government seem to believe that they are guilty to the tune of £500 million a year.

Welfare Reform and Pensions Act 1999

Until the 1980s the state undertook to offer a decent basic pension as the foundation stone of the system. Trustees should be required to undertake independent training specifically on investment issues. The TUCs preference would be for a requirement that deficits should be eliminated over a period no longer than the expected average future service lifetime of the current membership.

Welfare, Pensions and Disabled People: 1 Dec 1997: House of Commons debates

There is no reference in the Bill to that type of problem. If, as the Government argue, their policy encourages people to reinvest in their company and to raise productivity, even by only 0.
