There is another attitude that stands out in those who are successful in facilitating learning... I think of it as prizes the learner, prizes her feelings, her opinions, her person. Pastoral counseling in the early twentieth century adopted psychoanalytically oriented theories that focused on exploration of aggressive and sexual impulses in individuals for improved mental health. In the case of gnosticism, one is dealing with an abstract faith that is purely intellectual and made up of knowledge that is far from lived reality; meanwhile, pelagianism leads man to depend on his own abilities, thus ignoring the action of the Holy Spirit.
