Some Models for Estimating Technical and Scale Inefficiencies in Data Envelopment Analysis

The relevance of creating at the present stage of development of the state, the legal framework for consolidating the territorial integrity of the Russian Federation, including the Arctic territories belonging to international law and the need to save the generations of Russian settlers and researchers of historical heritage left in the development and consolidation of their sovereignty in the Arctic, is substantiated. From the initial data collection and its organization in GIS, the next step consists in making this data available via Internet. The research is based on a number of methods, the most important of which are document analysis and expert opinion methods.

Obviously, the image of polar explorers presented in fiction and social-scientific works of the first decades of the 21 st century, as well as in the literary works of the 19 th and 20 th centuries, has traditionally been idealized. This article explores the work of the contemporary artist Gennady Stepanovich Raishev and shows the features of the formation of that picture of the world that the artist broadcasts in his original works filled with vivid images of the Russian North. Therefore, minimizing the risk of tool damage and processing disruption is important.
