Max Bruch (1838)

Bruch died in his home in Berlin- in 1920. The substantial Allegro ma non troppo is based on an energetic first theme and a more flowing, lyrical second theme. It was during this period that he returned to writing chamber music, in 1918—20, with two string quintets and a string octet.

Max Bruch (1838)

Clara belonged to a musical family; her sister was the composer. Bruch had a long career as a teacher, conductor and composer, moving among musical posts in Germany: Mannheim 1862—1864 , Koblenz 1865—1867 , Sondershausen, 1867—1870 , Berlin 1870—1872 , and Bonn, where he spent 1873—78 working privately. His mother, from a well-known musical Lower Rhine family, was a distinguished singer who lost her voice quite early and thereafter gave singing lessons.

Bruch: Piano Quintet & other works

The two main themes are reprise in the recapitulation and the chorale returns again just before the brief coda. Later, the estate was bought by the Zanders family, who owned a large. Sibelius - Concerto En Ré Mineur Op.
