Court needs to uphold the rights of citizens : The Tribune India

Where the infringement of a Fundamental Right has been established, the Supreme Court cannot refuse relief on the ground that the aggrieved person may have remedy before some other court or under the ordinary law. We are unable to agree to this submission. Bhuvanai makes the point that just as we should not buy into the Anglo-Saxon model of judicial review simply because it provides a ready-made template, we should not also celebrate departures from the model only because it is a departure.
