The Enforcers

Diplomatic notes have been exchanged over antitrust cases and investigations, and legislation has been enacted, and is being contemplated, in several countries to deal with various aspects of the p r ~ b l e r n. The concept of transacting business is interpreted pragmatically by the Agencies.

Antitrust Enforcement and High Technology Markets

A few critics question whether the antitrust laws that were originally designed to apply to traditional manufacturing and distribution industries should be applied at all to competition in fast-moving industries where products often are quickly outmoded and market share may be ephemeral. First, the foreign government must have compelled the anticompetitive conduct under circumstances in which a refusal to comply with the foreign government's command would give rise to the imposition of penal or other severe sanctions. At the same time, they stress that considerations of international comity play an important role in the agencies' decisions, as well as the priority the agencies give to cooperating where possible with foreign counterparts.
