Journal of the Polynesian Society: Te Rangihiroa, By G. S. Roydhous, P 243

Aotearoa had no better known ambassador-at-large, the Maori people no greater champion than one of their own sons, the distinguished, wise, human, learned but modest, Te Rangihiroa.

The Maori Worldview & Maori Policy

A good deal of it has the texture of coarse muslin. In more remote areas travellers sometimes found Māori living by themselves and growing a few potatoes. Our lines of communication were short.

Most tā moko applied today is done using a tattoo machine, but there has also been a revival of the use of uhi. As in this complete twine, each strand passes over one warp at the back, it follows that the front half turn of the twine passes over two warps instead of one as in plain twined weaving with two strands.

The Maori Worldview & Maori Policy

Further, as this cloak was collected during the first visit, there may be no external influences on this type of tāniko pattern. The closer these threads are together, the tighter the weave, and the finer the garment. Missionaries report being appalled at the violent, seemingly arbitrary nature of Māori behaviour, including warfare, , , sexual abuse of women, killing of female children and.
