Robert Bridges: Poet, Poetry, Picture, Bio

Bridges went up to Oxford in 1873 to take his final examinations, but — ironically for a writer — failed his written tests. Many of the items are in French, some medieval French, though presumably this would not have troubled young Mary, at school in Winchester.

Robert Bridges, the Poet Laureate physician

A doctor by training, he achieved literary fame only late in life. Alfred Austin died in 1913 and the laureateship was offered to Bridges, who felt it his duty to accept, though with justified misgivings.

List of years in poetry

To me thou seemest yet The dead dream's thrall: While I live and forget Dream, truth and all. While he had a private income, he was expected to enter a profession and earn a living. There's not a ship in sight; And as the sun goes under, Thick clouds honour, Bridges was appointed as the poet laureate, a post he held until his death on 21 April 1930.

Robert Bridges The Spirit of Man

With brightest visions our fond hopes repair, Or crown our melancholy with despair; From death, still death, still would a comfort come: Since of this world the essential joy must fall In all distributed, in each thing some, In nothing all, and all complete in all; Till pleasure, ageing to her full increase, Puts on perfection, and is throned in peace. Gerard Manley Hopkins had died in 1889 and in 1918 Bridges published an edition of his poems with commentary, which brought Hopkins to public attention for the first time.

This poem is therefore a good example of how a symbol can be extended to convey a message that does not need to be expressed explicitly by the poet. He was buried at Yattendon. This is a daring and irresistible plunge to the heart of poetic sensibility.
