Prisons and Jails

Greenwald J, Burstein G, Pincus J, Branson B 2006 A rapid review of rapid HIV antibody tests. Commissioners police and crime commissioners, NHS England and clinical commissioning groups ensure that commissioned services work together to ensure comprehensive mental health assessment referrals can be made and information is shared for people identified as having a suspected mental health problem when they are in contact with the police because of a suspected offence. Therefore, there needs to be a radical redirection of expenditure towards well-funded community alternatives, staffed by well-trained, fully committed staff.

Why is nobody checking the bullying? Among all prisoners, 40 % had at least one somatic chronic health condition. The prevalence of common conditions such as back pain, hypertension, diabetes and asthma among prisoners was in the same range as that observed in their counterparts living outside the prison in the country Table.

Prisons and Jails

It profiles good practice and provides prison staff with practical guidelines about how to make active citizenship work, including how to manage any risks involved. It includes a detailed set of recommendations for action by the Prison Service to develop an anti-racist practice. While Craig was cornered among the chimney-pots - hurling defiant threats at the crouching policemen, and punctuating each threat with a screaming bullet from the heavy revolver he carried - Bentley, who had been grabbed by another policeman, was pressing himself against the cold brickwork and praying that his pal's bullets wouldn't hit him.

Coronavirus and Prisons: the need for Radical Alternatives // New Socialist

Are there any other concerns about the person's health? If a mental health problem is suspected, a referral system is in place for the person to receive a mental health assessment.
