In reference to this twist of mind, probably Aristotle was not an Aristotelian. General semantics resolves the issue in favor of determinism of a special kind called 'infinite-valued' determinism which always allows for the possibility that relevant 'causal' factors may be 'left out' at any given date, resulting in, if the issue is not understood at that date, 'indeterminism', which simply indicates that our ability to predict events has broken down, not that the world is 'indeterministic'. September 2008 General Semantics is a non- created by 1879—1950 during the years 1919 to 1933.

Notables among its alumni include , Senator , and Congressman. Connections to other disciplines General semantics has important links with analytic philosophy and the philosophy of science; it could be characterized without too much distortion as applied analytic philosophy. Lee, and others assembled elements of general semantics into a package suitable for incorporation into mainstream communications curricula.
