Anglo-Saxon England and the Norman Conquest. St , however, was adamant that the mission and in particular, the Christianization of Anglo-Saxon England should continue.

Anglo

Even allowing for those who were ill or could not make it for some other reason it meant that half the population did not go to church. During the 19 th century, a stone cross was erected on the site where the meeting was supposed to have taken place, as a commemoration of the event. She simply drove people away from Roman Catholicism
