Oral Transcription

For example, transcription of dialect that follows exact words pronunciation through phonetic spelling emphasises the difference or otherness of the oral text, particularly within the formalised conventions of writing associated with scholarship or archives. Oral history is different from other types of historical research by virtue of the format.

Recording

. There is value to listening to a transcript, but researchers overwhelmingly prefer a transcript for ease and speed of use.

Tips on Transcribing · · Veterans Oral History Transcription Project

This predicates the availability of extant transcripts or resources to transcribe, and so is often the option preferred by longstanding oral history projects, who post PDF versions of transcripts. Albuquerque: Oral History Association, 1993. My is available to consult open access.

Getting Started

Many people think it is also mechanical, neither challenging nor interesting. Michigan State University's Oral History in the Digital Age web site has very a useful tool entitled Ask Doug, which allows the user to answer questions about their recording needs and then offers a relevant range of available recording equipment based on those needs.

2 years, 35 interviews, 90+ original photographs: Lessons from Polygon's oral history reporting

First of all, a definition is in order. Do not use ellipsis points ... as they indicate something has been left out.

Recording

. The notes are something like the anthropologist's field notes. The human life span puts boundaries on the subject matter that we collect with oral history.

Recording

What in the environment affected my interview? What kinds of questions worked well? Digital files can be uploaded to computer via the USB port in the recorder or better via a card reader plugged into USB2 port on the PC. Even in the absence of written documentation, groups such as women, minorities, and the not-famous have been able to record their own histories and the histories of those they consider important using oral history. Dear, you can just put down that tea tray while we are talking.
