The Last Choice by C.G. Prado

. Discussion of preemptive suicide goes beyond contributing to current widespread debate about assisted suicide. If assisted suicide becomes more generally acknowledged and accepted, preemptive suicide will almost certainly follow.

Prado grew up in San Francisco, California. Criteria are provided to help determine whether soundly reasoned, cogently motivated, and prudently timed self-destruction can be in one's interests late in life. Discussion of preemptive suicide goes beyond contributing to current widespread debate about assisted suicide.

The last choice : preemptive suicide in advanced age

Prado is professor emeritus of philosophy at Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, and a Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada. In our time suicide and assisted suicide are being increasingly tolerated as ways to escape unendurable mental or physical suffering, but it isn't widely accepted that suicide may be a rational choice before the onset of such suffering. The Last Choice establishes that preemptive suicide in advanced age can be rational: that it can make good sense to evade age-related personal diminishment even at the cost of good time left.

It is crucial, then, to examine whether preemptive suicide constitutes a rational option for reflective aging individuals. In our time suicide and assisted suicide are being increasingly tolerated as ways to escape unendurable mental or physical suffering, but it isn't widely accepted that suicide may be a rational choice before the onset of such suffering. If there are good arguments for escaping intolerable situations caused by age-related deteriorative conditions, most of those arguments will equally support avoidance of those conditions.
