But Grzelakowski's research suggests just the opposite: that rather than softening their focus, the experience of raising children seems to improve women's ability to lead and inspire employees. But that majority momentum dwindles as women move up the ranks in news media organizations. Organizations need to ensure there are sufficient rungs on the ladder to help women climb into management positions.

50 Women Can — Take The Lead

To prepare women in each industry or sector, this program complements in-person training with inspiring speakers, networking events, virtual training, coaching, and facilitation of the development and planning for a collaborative action plan — designed by each cohort — to propel women to greater heights and to truly change the world. By studying failed software implementations in finance, she uncovered three main sources for the resistance.
