Early Ranching

Settled from the south were 1536, 1580 ; 1537 ; 1545 ; 1548 ; and 1553. These governorates, also called as provinces, were the basic of the territorial government of the Indies, and arose as the territories were conquered and colonized. The loss of indigenous population had a direct impact on Spaniards as well, since increasingly they saw those populations as a source of their own wealth, disappearing before their eyes.

The offered support, wanting to end the Spanish monopoly on trade with its colonies in the Americas.

TSHA

With help from the Smithsonian Institution, one professor and his student researchers have now analyzed more than 1,500 low-fired earthenware sherds—reading volumes from them about what trade and life must have been like throughout Alta California during the Spanish colonial period. A mounted Mapuche carrying off a Spanish woman. But they were always confronted with episodes of temporary or permanent abandonment by some or all of the Indians for whom they were established.
