British electorate 'most volatile in modern times', new study finds

The SNP took 45% of the vote, up eight points. In that same year Duddingston was bought by the Earl of Abercorn, who commissioned a Palladian mansion called Duddingston House which still stands today although much of the associated park has been taken over by a golf course and the Holyrood High School.

Press release: Most volatile British electorate in modern times

The Tories run the council as a minority, and that is unlikely to change as a result of these by-elections.
