The Practice of Medicine in Early Modern England

The leading physicians of the early 16th century wanted the power to grant licenses to those with actual qualifications and to punish unqualified practitioners and those engaging in malpractice. Baldwin Hamey's inkstand bell and 's whalebone demonstration rod, tipped with silver, are two that survive.

Category:Fellows of the Royal College of Physicians

At least eleven physicians practised in Norwich between 1570 and 1590, six of them academically trained.
