Training and professional development

Community Health Workers

As we discussed, there are primary and secondary stakeholders, as well as key stakeholders who may or may not fall into one of the other two categories. Secondary Stakeholders Those directly involved with or responsible for beneficiaries or targets of the effort These might include individuals and organizations that live with, are close to, or care for the people in question, and those that offer services directly to them.

Community Worker's Training Guide and Handbook

Other reasons to evaluate may be to demonstrate the effectiveness of the initiative so that it will be continued, to satisfy funder requirements and to provide information that will be useful to others or to subsequent initiatives.

You can contact community members through formal channels, such as joining a local organization, or informally by chatting with people that visit the library or that you encounter in other situations, such as shopping at local stores or attending school activities.

Community Development

Great to see a first lot of organizations both in public and private getting involved. Training — Training young people about community development can be engaging and empowering in many ways. It is used most in disadvantaged areas with health and other inequalities.

Responsibilities of a Community Development Officer

It provides a structure for professional development and professional recognition of CDWs and has the potential to continue to drive improved practice. This is a very important Worker Standard and my suggestion is for NATTB and our powerful team to visit all provinces to do awareness to CD practitioners on the CDW Worker Standard so there is uniformity in how we conduct our CD work and accreditations given accordingly… Thankyou Craig, One of the many great things about the CDW Standard is that it applies across diverse sectors.

Writing Reports; A Guide for Community Mobilisers

The director of an organization might be an obvious key stakeholder, but so might the line staff — those who work directly with participants — who carry out the work of the effort. People want to live in healthy communities.
