Third Fleet (Australia)

Shipwreck survivor camps are a neglected terrestrial component of maritime archaeology, usually being investigated purely as an adjunct to work on the associated wreck site. And of Autralia's greatest civil disaster? The southern coastlines were charted and were partly responsible for further explorations by George Bass, including the discovery of Bass Strait.

The Sydney Cove shipwreck project, International Journal of Nautical Archaeology

Kieran Hosty I started diving in Western Australia in 1976 and after a few years of mucking around on shipwrecks joined the Maritime Archaeological Association of Western Australia in order to try and make sense of what I saw on the seabed.

A 740km East Coast Trek That's 200 Years Old

Walked this day 8 miles. I am endeavouring to fit out a deck'd boat of about fifteen tons burthen for that purpose, in which I propose to send the two officers above mentioned.

The Sailors' Walk

Roads began to be constructed in strata of graded broken stone, laid in cambered beds and given a final coat of ironstone. A project to excavate and present material from the site was carried out by the designated management agency during the 1990s. HELENS, AND UP TO EDDYSTONE POINT.
